Dan – Brionglóid an tSeanbhacaigh Le Odhran Ó Donnabháin	Poem – Dream of the Old Beggar By Odhran Ó Donnabháin
Dá gcnagfainn ar an doras d'osclódh duine é. D'iarrfainn "An féidir liom teacht isteach, a dhuine uasail, a bhean a' tí?"	If I would knock on the door a person would open it. I would ask, "May I come in, Sir, Ma'am?"
D'fhreagródh sise "Cinnte, sin an seomra suite. Suigh síos ansin ar feadh soicind 's réiteoidh mé lón beag duitse."	She would answer "Of course, that is the sitting room. Sit down there for a second and I will prepare a small lunch for you."
Shuífinn síos cois tine in aice le piscín liath. Thiocfadh bean a' tí isteach le cupán tae is le bia.	I would sit down by the fire next to a grey kitten. The woman of the house would come in with a cup of tea and with food.
D'ólfainn an tae agus d'íosfainn mo lón. Nach é a bheadh go blasta? Bheadh comhrá agam le bean a' tí, is d'imeoinn liom go sásta.	I would drink the tea and I would eat the lunch. Wouldn't it be delicious? I would converse with the woman of the house, and I would leave contented.
Ach ní mar sin a bhíonn, nuair a chnagaim ar dhoras, áfach. Béiceann daoine go feargach orm, "Imigh leat, a dhuine salach".	But that's not how it is, when I knock on a door, though. People scream angrily at me, "Go away, dirty man".
